LIBRARY OF CONGRESS

Newspapers have been printed in Hawai'i since the mid-1800s

Late 19th and early 20th century newspapers provide a unique, first-hand chronicle of the social, economic, and religious issues of the time as primary sources of information from the period.

Newspapers in Hawai'i documented and shaped historical moments, including the volcanic eruptions of the Kilauea volcano on the Big Island, the labor strikes in the plantations, and the overthrow of the Hawaiian Monarchy.

Students can use the papers study political and social movements, or the use of language by reading the news articles, editorials, letters to the editors, etc. Teachers can use newspaper articles and ads to bring to life earlier times in history. Community members search for genealogical information.

The newspapers' printed indexes do not include newspapers published prior to 1929. Digitizing the newspapers preserves the content but also provides a more readily accessible and searchable alternative to aging microfilm.

September 2013

USNP 1980-2007

- Funded by National Endowment for the Humanities, managed by the Library of Congress
- Goals: Locate, catalog, and microfilm newspapers
Created bibliographic records for over 140,000 newspaper titles; provided access to 70 million pages of newsprint in microfilm
- University of Hawai'i with Hawaiian Historical Society, Hawai'i State Archives and State Library contributed for Hawai'i
- Hawai'i microfilmed 260,000 pages and cataloged 476 titles

NDNP (National Digital Newspaper Program)

- Enhance access to newspapers, build on foundation of the USNP by creating a national resource of historically significant newspapers from all the states and U.S. territories
- Establish technical conversion specs & practices for efficient basic discovery & access
- Develop production tools to ensure good digital objects that can be managed & preserved long-term
- Take preservation responsibility for the digitized newspapers

NDNP Program

- Began in 2005 with 6 state participants
- 2-Year awards to state projects, renewable
- Each state/phase to digitize 100,000 pages of microfilmed newspaper
- Newspapers picked must be from between 1836 and 1922
- Participants must write historical essays on each newspaper

Library of Congress will aggregate and permanently maintain digitized newspapers. Eventually, Chronicling America will have digitized newspapers from every U.S. state and territory.

Challenges

- Copyright issues (Who filmed the newspapers & owns the master microfilm)
- Technical specifications (Poorly filmed, low density readings)
- No universally accepted metadata standard for historical newspapers
- Titles, issues, pages and reels all need to be coded as different yet related classes of objects

TECHNICAL SPECIFICATIONS/DELIVERABLES

- Images scanned at 300-400 dpi in three image formats:
- Grayscale, uncompressed Tiff 6.0
- Compressed JPEG2000
- PDF Image with hidden text
 - digital formats with a high probability of sustainability
- Provide structural and technical metadata
- OCR text for all pages
- Capture grayscale preservation microfilm targets
- Deliver all digital assets in METS object structure

METS (Metadata Encoding and Transmission Standard)

includes metadata used to relate pages to title, date, and edition; sequence pages within issue or section; and to identify image and OCR files

OCR requirements

- Conform to ALTO XML schema
ALTO (Analyzed Layout and Text Object) details technical metadata for describing the layout and content of physical text resources*
- Provide bounding box coordinate data
Each column is sectioned and coordinates are used to place words

OCR/OWR

- Optical Character Recognition/Optical Word Recognition does not yield article “transcriptions”
- Text OCR'd from images of newspapers is used for searching purposes
- The bounding box coordinate information allows for several search options

WHY?

- XML structure is used by software for generating/creating multiple outputs:
 - HTML/XHTML for Web display
 - PDF for printing
- Ease of automated editing (single records or batches of records)
- Ability to validate data
- Interoperability (e.g. Repository submission and OAI harvesting)
- Create and improve User Interface without having to redo underlying source files

PASSENGERS ENJOY DANCE BEHIND CLOSED DOORS

(By United Press Leased Wire.)
SAN FRANCISCO, March 18.—
"It was some dance, and, believe me, it was never executed by a better dancer."
This was the way a passenger on the steamer Siberia, which arrived here today from the Orient, referred to the Hawaiian hula-

hula dance as performed behind closed doors by Miss Thurburt
Ward. A number of missionaries objected, but their protests were overruled and the spectators were all agreed that Miss Ward's performance rivaled that of the
"real native product."

Hawaiian Star, Honolulu Star-Bulletin, Daily Bulletin and Evening Bulletin

As Hawaii's oldest continuously-published newspaper, the Honolulu Star-Bulletin has a complex history. The paper was first conceived in 1870 as the Daily Marine Bulletin by Henry M. Whitney after he was forced to sell the Pacific Commercial Advertiser--the forerunner of the Honolulu Advertiser--amid criticism for his condemnation of the government's role in importing labor from Asia. Soon after the sale, Whitney began posting a hand-written, single-sheet daily news bulletin titled the Daily Marine Bulletin from his stationary and book business. The Daily Marine Bulletin included news and information on ship arrivals and mail dispatches and yet was reproached by the Advertiser: "The title of 'Marine' Bulletin appears to us a misnomer, seeing that gossip and criticism is [sic] freely and rather recklessly indulged in, as to matters that are not the least marine in their nature." The comment marked the beginning of what would be a long rivalry between the two papers.

Creative Uses

Heather Rojo used the Chronicling America site to find articles about her distant relatives, the husband and mother-in-law to Queen Liliuokalani. She chronicled her search in her blog, Nutfield Genealogy:

All our ukulele ads are online! On Hamilton Library's Flickr and Pinterest sites, that is.

Most are from U.S. Mainland newspapers. Ukulele was once a fad on the Mainland, so I searched "ukulele" in newspapers from all states but Hawaii.

Since upload, the ukulele ads instantly became popular in our collection. Many viewers seemed to find them through searching "ukulele" on Flickr.

Now we're uploading Hawaiian souvenir ads, mostly from Hawaii Newspapers. Continuing with the Mainland's fascination with Hawaii in the early 1900s, soon we'll upload ads for Hawaiian music records!
